Burke, Warren, MacKay & Serritella, P.C. is proud to announce the addition of a real estate tax appeal practice focusing on commercial and industrial real estate in the Cook and collar county areas. The practice will contest adverse property assessments to help clients obtain the lowest possible real estate tax liability allowed by law. Our ad valorem real estate tax appeal practice compliments the firm's real estate law practice which is counted among the most active and experienced in Chicago. Our real estate tax appeal practice is offered by Patrick D. Thompson, who moved his practice to Burke, Warren from DLA Piper earlier this year.

Burke, Warren's real estate tax appeal services include an analysis of current property tax assessment, development of strategies for appealing assessments, evidence compilation and negotiations with assessment officials at the county and circuit courts, as well as management of our clients' assessments on an ongoing basis to ensure continued compliance with state and local law.

The assessment and taxation process is intricate and involves interaction between governmental officials and agencies, as well as the taxpayer and the taxpayer's counsel. At Burke, Warren, we navigate this process on behalf of our clients and work to combine our legal expertise and knowledge of the marketplace to achieve the maximum refund or tax savings for our clients.
